The Open Column

Assigned Readings.

Editor the Missourian: Let restraining hands be laid on the instructors who assign four-hours readings for each credit hour. The collateral reading in many of the two and three hour courses is analogous to the Irishman's rope from which someone cut the end.

Today a student read hurriedly, breathlessly, heedlessly for four hours to cover a one-period assignment in a three-hour course. Small matter if he couldn't understand the context with the first reading. There was no time to repeat. This reading, done in a concentrated fashion, should have taken six instead of four hours.

The course is elementary, the reading rambling and disjointed. Much of it overlapped. There was, however, enough difference to keep you on the qui vive for such questions as "What does Jones say in regard to this?" "Does Smith agree with him?"

It is unfair, unjust and ill-considered, both to the student and to the instructors of other courses. It is particularly objectionable when the references are more or less piffling, rambling, semi-scientific; when their brief say could be said in one-tenth the space; when any second-rate copy reader would eliminate nine-tenths of the words and leave remaining all the truth, outstanding and helpful. Can't the situation be remedied? M.

For a Better Columbia.

Editor the Missourian: Ways and means for making Columbia a better town, for improving its commercial interests, have been discussed for years. Many methods have been tried. The latest is the McKeand plan of organizing commercial clubs. By this plan, it is said, the Columbia Chamber of Commerce would be enlarged, put on a business basis and built up in such a way as to do the town a better good.

The McKeand plan is all right, if it does what its backers claim for it. But why the McKeand plan? Why not a Columbia plan? The McKeand plan is not new. It calls for a reorganization of the commercial club, a greater enlistment of members and the co-operation of the farmers of the community. But surely Columbia does not have to go out of town for help to boost its commercial club, or, if such is the case, import a live man, make him permanent secretary and pay him to build up the club.

The reorganization of the club should begin at once. Plans like those suggested by the McKeand people have been worked out elsewhere by secretaries of the clubs. In the first place there are too many separate organizations in Columbia. The chamber of commerce should be made the main body, either absorbing the others, or simply making them allied organizations under the direction of a head secretary. The work of the Retail Merchants' Association, the Civic League, the Columbia Charities Association and other bodies could be continued with more success than at present if they were allied with the chamber of commerce, the main body.

A live secretary could start a membership campaign and could do many other things to better the club's interests. There are men who make it their business to serve as secretaries to town building organizations. If necessary, employ a "professional." But keep him here; make him a part of the town, and put the responsibility of building a better Columbia on Columbia citizens. The work will be done from the inside then, it will be more permanent; and the "fruits of the labor" will be more enjoyed. T.

CONFIDENCE

IN SEPTEMBER 1915 the Daily Missourian carried nearly 3,000 inches more of paid advertising by the merchants of Columbia than was carried by the paper in 1914. The increase this year was especially pronounced in the last sixteen days of the month. The complete figures follow:

September 1915.....7,720 inches carried.
September 1914.....4,877 inches carried.
Increase.....2,843 inches paid advertising.

The figures for the last sixteen days of the month:

September 1915.....5,983 inches carried.
September 1914.....4,877 inches carried.
Increase.....1,106 inches paid advertising.

The increase in paid advertising for the last sixteen days of the month amounted to 55 3-10 columns.

The increase for the full month amounted to 142 3-20 columns of paid advertising.

In dollars and cents the Missourian carried in September 1915 nearly $800 worth of merchants' advertising more than was carried in the same period of 1914.
